SPRING FLING

Things are finally starting to heat up, with possible record-breaking temperatures expected today. But is this warm-weather flirtation here to stay, or is it just a tease? 4

ISTOCK | KATHLEEN COMBS

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Are you ready for warm weather again? Wednesday will feel like spring, with temperatures so high along the East Coast, forecasters are anticipating the weather will break multiple records. But is this an early sign of spring or just a fluke? I reached out to meteorologists at the National Weather Service to hear how unusual this February warmth is. Read more on page 4 and at metro.us.

NEW PRESSURE ON TRUMP CAMPAIGN AIDES

I U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller on Tuesday stepped up pressure on two former Trump campaign aides, Paul Manafort and Rick Gates, to cooperate in his probe into possible collusion with Russia. Attorney Alex van der Zwaan, son-in-law of one of Russia's richest men, pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court in D.C. to a charge of lying to the Special Counsel's office. The case involves work that van der Zwaan, a 33-year-old Dutch citizen, performed in 2012 for Manafort and Gates, senior officials in Trump's 2016 election campaign. The two former aides have been charged with conspiracy to launder money and failure to register as foreign agents related to work for a pro-Russia Ukrainian party. The charge against van der Zwaan make no reference to the 2016 election.

FLA SHOOTING SURVIVORS PUSH FOR GUN CONTROL

2 More than 100 students and parents from the Florida high school where 17 teens and staff members died in a shooting rampage boarded buses on Tuesday for a trip to the state capital Tallahassee to push for a ban on assault rifles. Last week's massacre, the second-deadliest shooting at a public school in U.S. history, has inflamed a national debate about gun rights and prompted teens from Marjory Stoneman Douglas

High School and across the United States to demand legislative action. The incident has galvanized advocates for stricter gun controls, including survivors of the shooting. The youth-led protest movement erupted within hours of the shooting attracted a prominent celebrity supporter on Tuesday when actor George Clooney and his wife Amal, a human rights lawyer, said they would donate $500,000 to help fund a gun control march in D.C.

5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

TRUMP MOVES TO OUTLAW 'BUMP STOCKS'

4 President Trump said on Tuesday his administration would take steps to outlaw an accessory enabling a rifle to shoot hundreds of rounds a minute, as the White House added he may consider other firearms restrictions after last week's Florida school shooting. "I signed a memorandum directing the attorney general to propose regulations to ban all devices that turn legal weapons into machine guns," Trump told an event. The move bypasses Congress, where legislation to ban "bump stocks" has stalled since an October massacre in Las Vegas that killed 58 people. It puts Trump at odds with powerful gun rights groups like the NRA that opposed such efforts. This came shortly after spokeswoman Sarah Sanders said he would consider raising the minimum age for buyers of the assault-style rifle used last week.

UBER CEO SEES COMMERCIAL FLYING TAXIS

5 Uber Technologies Inc. CEO Dara Khosrowshahi said on Tuesday he can see commercialization of the Uber Air flying taxi service happening within five to 10 years. The U.S. ride-hailing app maker has said it expects flying vehicles to eventually become an affordable method of mass transportation. Khosrowshahi was speaking at an investor forum in Tokyo on his first visit to Asia as Uber CEO. Ride-hailing firms such as Uber see populous Japan as a potentially lucrative market and are pressing regulators to ease stringent rules governing the taxi industry.

Springlike weather bringing record high temperatures to Northeast

Today's high temperatures may edge out previous records from the early 1900s.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Are you feeling spring fever? Temperatures could hit record highs this week, giving an early taste of the warmer season.

"The whole eastern part of the country is feeling the effects of this unseasonable warmth," said Kim Buttrick, meteorologist with the National Weather Service Boston office.

On Tuesday, temps along the East Coast were higher than average for this time of year, climbing higher than 60 degrees in Boston. The city's normal high this time of year is

Wednesday will be a good day to spend some time outside in Boston, Philly and New York City. GETTY IMAGES

40 degrees, Buttrick said.

Wednesday will be even warmer, with the high expected to reach 70.

"In fact, records are likely to be broken," Buttrick said. "For Feb. 21, the record high in Boston is 63 degrees, which was set in 1906."

New York City will feel the warmth as well, possibly breaking the previous record, though it could be too close to call it a sure shot right now, said Jay Engle from the NWS New York City office.

The record high for Feb. 21 in New York City is 68 degrees, set in 1930. Forecasters are predicting it'll hit near 70 degrees, but some fog in the morning could affect how quickly things warm up and how high the temperature gets overall.

"We're getting close to or maybe just barely breaking the record, but I wouldn't call it a high confidence forecast for a new record — it's about 50-50," he said. "We are confident we'll get high above normal."

Though a record high might be surprising to those who still shudder remembering the brutal cold snap the city got earlier in the winter, Engle said it isn't rare to get record highs and lows in the same season.

And though temperatures won't stay this high for very long, "we are looking for relatively mild weather to continue pretty much to end of the month," Engle said.

Farther down the coast in Philadelphia, Wednesday is expected to be 73 degrees, just barely breaking the record high of 72, set in 1930.

This doesn't necessarily mean we're full on into spring, though, warned Paul Fitzsimmons of the NWS Philadelphia office.

"The pattern for the next week or two does look to be staying relatively mild, not this warm but mild — but even so, you can still get wintry weather right through March," he said.

Though these highs are not normal for this time of year, meteorologists said that big swings in temperature (like how some areas on the East Coast just saw snow and previously had below-average frigid temps earlier this winter) throughout the season are common.

US to extend skimpy health insurance outside of Obamacare

The U.S. government on Tuesday proposed extending the availability of skimpy health insurance plans to millions of Americans in another Trump administration move aimed at undercutting the requirements of the Affordable Care Act, often called Obamacare.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services issued a proposed rule that such plans, now available only for periods of three months or less, will be available for up to 12 months. The agency is considering whether these plans will be renewable.

The plans will not include the benefits that define the insurance created under Democratic former President Barack Obama, including required health benefits such as maternity coverage and the guarantee of insurance regardless of health.

The plans won't include the Obamacare benefits like maternity coverage and the guarantee of insurance regardless of health. GETTY IMAGES

Obamacare currently allows for such short-duration plans, but they are limited to three months. The agency said it expects 100,000 to 200,000 people to shift from an Obamacare plan to such insurance in 2019 when the rule would go into effect, but that millions more people who have no insurance will likely sign up.

Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar, who began serving in his post less than a month ago, said in his first media briefing on Tuesday that the proposed rule marked "an important first step." He said the administration is working on additional policies aimed at providing cheaper health insurance options for consumers.

America's Health

Insurance Plans, the biggest U.S. health industry lobby, said it was concerned the expansion would make it more expensive to cover the sicker people, particularly those with pre-existing conditions, who remain on the Obamacare marketplace. About 10 million people are enrolled in Obamacare plans that are eligible for income-based subsidies. REUTERS

Is this Cambridge hotspot the best new restaurant in the country?

Nestled inside Harvard Square's historic Conductor's Building, Les Sablons has quickly transformed the space into a must-stop destination for area foodies.

After opening its doors last spring, this Cambridge hotspot by chef Jeremy Sewall and renowned restaurateur Garrett Harker is now gaining national attention for its bold and modern take on classic French fare. Les Sablons was a 2018 James Beard Award semifinalist for best new restaurant, the Bay State's only contender in an extremely stacked category.

Although there's always a bit of added pressure to perform that comes with winning an accolade like a James Beard Award, Sewall tells Metro that taking home the honor would mean a lot to him and his team.

"It's always special when you get acknowledged at that level in that way," he says. "It raises the bar for the expectations for the guests and for the staff."

Sewall says Les Sablons has given him a chance to "stretch some culinary muscles" he hasn't been able to use while working on other ventures. Featuring a stylish bar/lounge on the first floor and an elegant dining area and bar on the second floor, the decorated chef says the beautiful space is what inspired him to go back to his European-style roots.

"You don't get restaurant space like that in Boston or Cambridge that often," Sewall says.

If you go

2 Bennett St., Cambridge,
lscambridge.com

"We felt like there was an opportunity to create something that didn't exist in the area."

In addition to Les Sablons, Harker, the restaurant's co-owner, is up for a James Beard Award. The mastermind behind establishments like Row 34, Island Creek Oyster Bar and Eastern Standard is nominated in the Outstanding Restaurateur category alongside fellow local Ken Oringer.

After working with Harker on so many projects over the years, Sewall praises his partner for always putting together amazing teams.

"Part of our enjoyment is watching the people around us grow and develop," Sewall says. "We love working on all this stuff together and watching all the people around us be successful."

With dozens of other restaurants, chefs and culinary stars from Boston and New England have been nominated in several James Beard categories, Sewall is proud to see how the area's food scene has exploded since he first started working here in the early '90s.

"It's become a city where you can spend your entire culinary career," Sewall says. "The diversity of restaurants now and the diversity of talent, it's amazing."

Meet Hollywood's next big deal, Aussie Angourie Rice

The 17-year-old "Every Day" star is ready to make her mark.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Angourie Rice is making some serious waves. Metro talked with the star of "Every Day," and the 17-year-old took our breath away. Here's what she had to say (and why you'll see her on the big screen for years to come).

What stood out for you about "Every Day"?
I really loved the idea of different theories of how we exist in the world, and who we are, and challenging those ideas. I think this book asks how would someone live in our world today if they didn't have a gender or a sexuality or culture or race? How would that impact their life? I thought that was such an interesting question. And I loved how the book explored that. It examines such a big complex idea with so many levels. But at its core it is still just about falling in love for the first time, and friendship, and family, and those things are universal.

What do you look for in your roles?
I look for stories that I want to tell. Sometimes a script will come through and it will be fantastic, but the role isn't great. It will just be the girlfriend or the friend next door that doesn't do anything. And that isn't what

GETTY

I am about. I don't just want to stand at the side and watch the hero. I want to play roles that have a proper story arc and a character journey and make things happen in the story. That's really important for me.

How do you audition? Are you just yourself or slightly different to match a character?
I think it is probably a mixture of both. Some characters are similar to me, so I will draw from my own experiences. But then I like to challenge myself and try to embody someone that is really different from me. Doing both of those things is equally as exciting for me as an actor. Because it allows me to play with how I play a character.

How has it been combining school work with these big Hollywood films?
It is strange because my career has taken off as I have progressed through high school. It is tough to keep it up, because education is really important for me. But you do have to make compromises. Because in reality, when I am on set, I am balancing a full-time job with school.

KEEP IT SPECIAL

The NBA is legitimately looking at doing away with the "East vs. West" format in the playoffs each season, and while everyone and their mother is saying this would be friggin' awesome — let's take a look at the downside. In baseball, the World Series used to feel so much "bigger" before interleague play as elite sports matchups are so much more fun when there is mystery involved. In the NBA, there's a reason why "Celtics vs. Lakers" is so special. Mainly, because it's so rare. Hypothetically in a few years — a Celtics-Lakers first-round matchup (say, the No. 2 versus the No. 15 seed) would be cool for the color scheme for about five minutes, but announcers trying to sell us on Kyrie versus Lonzo Ball being right up there with Russell vs. Wilt, and Magic vs. Bird would wear thin in a hurry. There's something to be said for trying to keep things special by virtue of rarity.

A TALIB RETURN?

Bill Belichick very much regards Broncos cornerback Aqib Talib as "the one that got away."

In NFL free agency in 2014 — Belichick and the Patriots were outbid by Denver as Talib inked a six-year, $57 million contract with $26 million in guaranteed money. Talib certainly worked out for the Broncos as they went on to win a Super Bowl title with him, but now the chickens have come home to roost on that fat contract. With the Broncos desperate to sign a quarterback this offseason (rumor has it that John Elway is ready to dump a barrel of money on Kirk Cousins' lap), they need to release several of their more high-priced players — and Talib will likely be the first to go. Meanwhile, the Patriots have a glaring need for an upgrade in their secondary as evidenced by Nick Foles and the Eagles offense doing whatever they wanted to do in the Super Bowl. Placing Talib opposite Stephon Gilmore (who came into his own down the stretch of this past season), would instantly give the Pats one of — if not — the best cornerback tandems in the NFL.

Adding fuel to the fire that Talib could return to the Patriots is that Belichick has uncharacteristically gone out of his way to fawn over Talib in recent years — despite the fact that he spurned the Pats in free agency.

Talib has returned the favor in interviews, saying that Belichick "made him a man" while he was in New England.

BOO WHO?

"J.D.s" don't typically work out well in Boston, but J.D. Martinez will likely be the exception. Count David Price among those who think Martinez will do well here, but he also has a warning for the newest member of the Sox.

"Oh yeah, he'll get booed,"

Price said with a chuckle to USA Today. "I told J.D. he will love the guys here in this clubhouse, but also told him he'll get booed. He's a quiet, soft-spoken guy, but he'll handle it."

Martinez actually celebrated his 18th birthday as a fan at Fenway in the mid-2000s, decked out in Sox gear. Not really sure how that works considering he's from Pembroke Pines, Florida. Maybe he was part of that post-2004 World Series bandwagon crowd.

Sox fans certainly won't judge as long as he posts monster numbers.
